BACKGROUND

Trained as an industrial designer my experience extends to design of the built environment.

Working alongside architects, landscape architects, engineers, specialist suppliers & contractors I have worked on buildings, parks and street furniture, often within public open space.

Proposed arts trail for Chiltern District Council.

Many projects involve street furniture for use in public places. In this case a series of shelters and features along a proposed cycle route through some of England's most attractive countryside.

System built summerhouse
Some commissions straddle the gap between industrial design & the built environment. Here a versatile building system is based on a single moulding. Six mouldings make a single hexagonal barrel vault structure. These may in turn tessellate around the most awkward of sites.

Mobile box office.

Much of my work is concerned with items for serial production. In this case a portable box office for selling tickets to members of the general public at occasional venues.

Glory Hole, Lincoln.
 A short listed entry in a national competition, hosted by Groundwork Lincoln, to improve a much neglected section of Lincoln river's edge.

Mobile box office.
 A short listed entry in a national competition, hosted by Liverpool's Institute of Performing Arts.

Monument to Robert Hooke
 A shelter, incorporating seating, overlooking Willen Church, one of Hooke's only remaining buildings.

I have been privileged to work on a range of projects involving public open space within the new city of Milton Keynes, working alongside innumerable contractors & subcontractors. Commissions have ranged from shelters & street furniture, through to children's play areas.
